

UNDER THE HEAVY BALKAN WAR CLOUD

Men Among New York's Greeks Eager to Fight for Country.

WOMEN OFFER AS NURSES Red Cross Contributions Pour- ing In From All Sections of Country.

ONE of the letters received in answer to the appeal of the Greek Red Cross Society in this city the other day contained $50. It was from a bootblack and occasioned only a ripple of interest, for the call for financial aid has been answered generously from all ranks of society. In a single day $2,000 was received and between $150,000 and $160,000 has been collected as the joint result of the efforts of the Red Cross and Greek Pan-Hellenic Society up to date.

On October 4 the permanent committee of Athens, consisting of Messrs. Valavritis, president; Maccos, vice-president; and Paspati, secretary, cabled that war was imminent, and this message was sufficient to set the machinery of patriotism in motion. On October 18 a second cable despatch followed with the same signatures, saying:

"War is declared. Make appeal for funds."

The circular sent out in response to this went all over the United States wherever Greeks reside or have affiliations. Those who received it were asked for contributions for the Red Cross fund. The New York committee of the Greek Red Cross consists of D. M. Botas, Consul-General of Greece; C. Pappachalopoulos, manager of the Pan-Hellenic Union, and A. P. Ralli, treasurer and secretary.

The intense feeling in the Greek population in this part of the world and their willingness to give their strength and means freely to "the cause" are explained by one of them, who said that while there could be no question as to the courage of the Turks and the fact that the Turks compared themselves with the Romans in their relation to Greece, it should be remembered that Rome lay upon Greece like a sponge, merely absorbing her culture and art, while Turkey, on the other hand, could only be compared to a huge stone, crushing the people and demolishing their monuments.

The Greek Red Cross Society of Athens, which was represented at the International Congress in Washington last May, has been organized since 1855 and is under the patronage of Queen Olga and the Metropolitan of the Greek Church is actively interested in it.

On October 23 more than 5,000 Greeks had sailed from this country for the scene of war, many of these helped directly or indirectly by the work of the Red Cross societies here and in Athens. Tickets were purchased outright for some, partial assistance was given in other cases, while promises and pledges to look out for the families of several of the departing soldiers were made. Considering the short time that has elapsed since the declaration of war much has been accomplished, and if the war continues and takes on the desperate features that are predicted, all the help that can be given will probably be needed.

The Argentina sailed on October 24 with 500 Greeks among the steerage passengers, the next day the Patria followed with another like complement and later the Sant' Anna of the Fabre Line took between five and six hundred more. This, however, leaves the Greek population scarcely affected, there being approximately 25,000 Greeks in New York city alone and over 300,000 in the United States. But that preparations among those remaining are being made and that every week hereafter the outward bound steamships of the Greek lines will be equally well filled is the statement of the Greek residents who are working on behalf of the returning patriots.

It takes a fortnight to reach either Patras or Piræus, the port of Athens, by steamers sailing direct from this port and about the same time if the voyage is made by way of Southampton, Cherbourg or other port of northern Europe. The first Greeks sailing had the advantage of special rates, but now that the demand for passage is so great the companies are profiting and at present the cost of a steerage trip to Greece is $25.

Some of the money contributed for the philanthropic and patriotic work has been raised by women by personal appeal, as the necessity of getting assistance at once precludes the possibility of obtaining it by the usual methods of bazaars and like enterprises. Many women, both Greek and American, have made application to be enrolled as nurses and sent to the front.

Mrs. Anna Coromilas, an American and wife of the Minister to the Hellenic Republic, is actively interested in the work. Mrs. William H. Draper, secretary of the New York county chapter of the Red Cross, has expressed herself as ready and willing to assist, not only in her professional capacity but outside that as well. Mrs. Melachro, wife of the importer, who is himself working in connection with the Greek branch of the Red Cross, expects to take an active part in the present Balkan struggle as she did in 1897, when from Egypt she sent a corps of trained nurses to take care of their wounded countrymen. Many American women have gone to Mrs. Melachro to ask what they can do, and as she speaks the English language with difficulty it has been necessary for her to have an interpreter.

Another active worker is Mrs. Marie Economidy, wife of one of the editors of the Pan-Hellenic, the Greek daily newspaper. With several of her country women she is organizing a corps of nurses and is bringing to this work both energy and experience. Probably none of either sex is better acquainted with the scattered Greek population of the United States than Mrs. Economidy, for she has travelled all over the country with the idea of studying the sociological and domestic conditions of her compatriots. Miss Johanna Lyberopoulos is one of a number of young Greek women who hold themselves in readiness for service.

The treasurer of the American Red Cross in New York city is Jacob H. Schiff, and he has sent out an appeal similar to that of the Greek society. The headquarters of the Red Cross in Washington and all applications made at the branch office in the Charities Building on East Twenty-second street in this city are referred there for final answer. Last week among the many disappointed applicants for employment as nurses, who apparently expected to be sent out on the following day, were two women of foreign birth who had married Greeks, one an Italian, one a German. The husbands of both had sailed and the young women, though without the required certificates of proficiency, were desirous of following them to act as nurses in the hospitals of Turkey and Bulgaria. One of the women was insistent and quoted the published statistics of one of the battles, saying: "Surely if in one battle there are 2,000 dead and 4,000 wounded there must be great need of such help as I can give."

Parallel with the interest in the Red Cross work is that in the labors of the missionaries in the Balkans. Inquiry at the various offices of foreign missions in this city is met by the statement that, except in the most extreme cases, as in the Chinese war, missionaries are not recalled from the scene of their labors in case of war, and that when the regular work of the missions, schools and churches is interrupted it is left to the missionaries to decide whether they shall remain or return to their own country. It has been the exception rather than the rule in the past that missionaries have preferred to come home. As a general thing they turn their energies into the new fields opened by the war.

"No one," said President Taft, after returning from a journey round the world, "can study the movement of modern civilization from an impartial standpoint and not realize that Christianity and the spread of Christianity is the only basis for the hope of modern civilization."

"It is," said one of the executive members of a missionary board, interviewed on this subject, "this reason that makes the several hundred missionaries scattered all over the Balkans and the many thousands of the native population who have come under their influence equally anxious in regard to the termination of the struggle."

The missionaries in Turkey are not obnoxious to either party and which ever side wins their work is sure to go on. The late Catholics, when Patriarch at Constantinople, told one of the missionary officials that their departure from Turkey would be a great calamity. The great majority of the people of Turkey are Mohammedans. Many of the ruling class are eager for more liberty and are chafing under the restraint of Islam endeavors to put upon them. They desire a modern education for their children, liberty to inquire into the truths of other religions and a form of government that will assure protection for property and person and give prosperity to the nation. During and after the war, it is believed, this feeling is sure to be accentuated and the work of the missionaries is of particular importance now.

The Presbyterian Board has no mission in Turkey and the Methodist only a few. The American Board has practically this whole territory to itself and has four missionary districts, three within the Turkish Empire and another partly in Turkey and partly in Bulgaria. In this territory are included part of Bulgaria, some of Turkey in Europe, including Macedonia and Albania, all of Turkey in Asia, including Asia Minor, Armenia, Kurdistan and northern Mesopotamia. Its population is said to number nearly 21,000,000.

Throughout a great portion of this territory, it is stated, there is now greater freedom for the press than formerly, greater freedom to travel, greater facility in securing permission for the building of schools and churches; but a political fact of great importance from the missionary point of view is the disillusionment of the Christian minority of the population. Four years ago they were full of hope and trusted that the motto of the Young Turks, who advocated French nationalism, the "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity" cry, had come to stay. Then came the massacres of Cilicia and other barbarities. Particularly disheartened were the Albanians. With the adoption of the Turkish constitution they expected religious liberty and the national recognition accorded the Bulgarians, Rumanians, Servians and Greeks. Albanian clubs were opened in many cities and in a short time sixteen newspapers were published in the Albanian language. In the days of Abdul Hamid the Albanians were under suspicion if they manifested any interest in their own written language; then came the order of the Government to close schools, printing presses and clubs.

Mahomet said: "The fire of hell shall not burn the legs of him who is covered with the dust of battle on the road of God."

It is the Mahomet of this belief to whom at the 103d annual meeting of the Board of Missions just held at Portland Dr. George Herrick referred. Dr. Herrick published last year a book written in the Turkish language on the "Life, Teaching and Claims of Jesus Christ."

The Mohammedan is dazzled in contemplation of the glory of the people, he said. "But in recent years he does sometimes stand aghast at discovering that while he still claims to be superlatively religious his social and moral life is fatally gangrened. The need of the Moslem world is not more and better theology. The need is moral principle to live by and spiritual life to back to build their hopes on."

"What is true of Adrianople," the delegate at this meeting, "is true of the whole region thereabout. The spirit of it is characterized by the one word 'Repression.' It is a repression that is felt upon the land as well as the people. There are hundreds of miles of land along the Levant waters where now not an olive is produced, although the wild olive grows plentifully. The orchard, teeming with population and wealth; but now on the slopes leading down to the sea there are only a few black goat hair tents in winter and hardly a single soul in the heat of summer."

Turkish Soldiers Without Feces.

From the London Chronicle.

For the first time, we read, the Turkish soldier is going to war without the fez. Mahomet II, when he changed the uniform of his army, tried to introduce the shako, but the opposition of the soldiers was so strong that he was obliged to give up the idea. The fez is certainly a poor covering for men on active service, for even the change of its color to khaki did not get over its feebleness as a protection against sun or bad weather.

Hence the headmaster devised some time ago the Turkish soldier's headgear. The Turkish devotion to the fez was explained by Duckett Ferriman: "The people against the hat rests on a religious basis. If the ramaz (form of prayer) is rightly performed the forehead must touch the ground. The brim of a hat or the peak of a cap would prevent this."

AT THE CHESSBOARD; GAMES AND PROBLEMS

European Magazines and Chess Columns Bring Tales About Congress.

ONLY TWO MEN DOUBTFUL Local Season Getting Into Full Swing—Many Matches and Tournaments Prepared.

IT is rather peculiar that all the leading foreign exchanges to hand are "knocking" the proposed New York-Havana congress. They give lists of players who are either determined to stay away or who are doubtful. Among the former they cite Lasker, Bernstein, Vidmar and Schlechter and among the latter they give the names of Tarrasch and Maroczy. On the strength of these statements they argue that it would be absurd to call a tourney an international championship affair when there will be so many first class men absent. In fact nobody seems to have a good word for the forthcoming event. As a matter of fact and according to Manager P. D. Rosebault these foreign exchanges give fairly tame and simple. As far as Lasker is concerned they are perfectly right. The committee was unable to grant Lasker the conditions he desired and hence he no longer was looked upon as a possible candidate. Neither Dr. Bernstein nor Dr. Vidmar ever was counted upon as sure. As far as four to six weeks ago Hoffer, the London agent of the local tourney committee, cabled that these players were very doubtful, but that he hoped to be able to get their acceptance after all.

On the other hand, Rubinstein, Niemzowitch, Duras, Schlechter, Spielmann, Teichmann, Tarrasch, Burn, Janowski, Marshall, Capablanca, and others, sent in writing to Hoffer that they surely would make the trip west. In view of the fact that Hoffer is in almost daily communication with the local committee it is really ridiculous to see those statements, which seemed to be made for the sole purpose of hurting the enterprise. However, within a few days from now the cable will bring the news that all the masters under the management of Mr. Hoffer will sail for this country on the steamship George Washington, due here on November 24.

For the present no additional information can be given regarding the congress, as most regulations and rules to govern the international tourney will have to be agreed upon by the competitors after their arrival in this city.

After several postponements the rooms of the Rice Chess Club, 202 Lenox avenue, were opened yesterday, the principal attraction being the Cuban champion, J. R. Capablanca, and the local expert, Charles Jaffe. These men were scheduled to play the third and final game of their match. The clubroom consists of the parlor floor, which is very elegantly decorated, fitted with electric lights and in very comfortable and cozy style. There is room for five tables in the front parlor, ten members can be accommodated with boards in the intervening room leading to the back parlor, which latter room is fixed up as an office and library and has also accommodation for five chess tables. It is needless to say that the walls in all the three rooms are richly adorned with pictures, and what is still more important the club has its own caterer, who supplies the men with food and anything required by a chess player on or off the board. As the Capablanca-Jaffe game was scheduled for a late hour yesterday comments on this contest are held over for next week. The tournament committee announces that it will shortly begin the annual championship tournament, the first prize having been fixed at $100. The members and friends are very much pleased with the general appearance of the clubrooms, and it is very likely that the club will be very prosperous in the future. Over and over again Harlem chess players have been invited to join the club in Harlem, but it was a failure, but since the Rice Chess Club went up town forty new members have been enrolled.

Throughout the week the rooms of the newly established Progressive Chess Club, at 143 Second avenue, near the City Hall, have been crowded with members during the afternoon and evening, and to judge from appearances this club will become one of the great factors with metropolitan chess players. As stated in THE SUN on Thursday, a large number of matches will be played and simultaneous exhibitions will be given, and it is also intended to arrange for the first time a chess tournament in this city. Seventy members are now enrolled.

The Brooklyn Institute Chess Club room is now open for the season of 1912-13 and many are busily engaged in the competition for the title offered by the Brooklyn Chess Club. Those interested are reminded that this prize is offered for the highest percentage attained by the winner in the series of nine Saturday games in which play for the same may be carried on.
